FOREWORD

Before me is the foreword written by John H. Finley for the 1919 edition of the Elementary School Book List. What a wealth of beauty and understanding found expression in these two paragraphs:

Moreover, into what a wonderland the schoolhouse and grounds may be expanded, no matter how small or physically unattractive, through the magic of books; they have the power to bring all the world about the schoolhouse windows, and to summon the great of all ages to sit within the schoolhouse walls.

I do not speak out of the imagination of maturity, in saying this, but out of the memory of a boyhood in which books, though they were few in number, brought the history and romance of the world into that little flat bit of prairie around the schoolhouse.

So long as books are read by the American school children, these thoughts from the pen of our beloved Finley deserve a place in the hearts of teachers and librarians.

For me, a certain one-room school would have been a dull place indeed, during my later stay in it, had it not been for twenty or thirty well-chosen books. How I revelled in Plutarch's Lives and The Life of Washington! How vividly I recall The Lady of The Lake and The Lay of The Last Minstrel. Then, there was a book that led me out under the stars at night; the books that drew me into the fields and along our prairie streams, seeing where I had not seen; the books that carried me back into the stories of old England; and those other books, which, looking back through the years, I see only as dim memories, but which contributed their quota to an eager little mind seeking a way out from the narrow world that bound him.

Nor am I altogether certain that narrowness of horizon is limited to children in the rural schools of the prairie states. Everywhere children are seeking the romance, the history, the knowledge of life, that carries them beyond the present, out of their own limited realities. To satisfy this inarticulate longing of childhood, the contributions of hundreds of people have been sifted and weighed by the School Libraries section. Back of their search and selection lies the work of thousands of teachers who have experimented with these readings and have found them good in their teaching of children. We send this revision of the Elementary School Book List to the elementary school teachers of the State of New York with the hope that it may help them lead children out into the broader realms of the world's loveliness:

LIST OF BOOKS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL LIBRARIES

THE USE OF THE LIBRARY IN THE SCHOOL

Book Selection and Ordering

This list is a revision of the one published for elementary school libraries in 1919. It has been prepared in cooperation with the various supervisors of the Department and aims to provide material to supplement all subjects in the syllabuses. In addition, many books of general reading are included. A number of the newer books are given, but no school library can afford to buy the new publications until it has a basic collection of standard books for children. The library should not only furnish supplementary reference material. It must create a taste for reading and improve standards of taste. Even small collections should contain books about a variety of subjects.

Books should be ordered from one of the large book dealers unless the local dealer can give as good a discount. Every room should have a few new books each year. Otherwise the whole library deteriorates and becomes unattractive. Application for state aid should be made before purchase, if duplication is to be assured.

Use of the Library

When there is no school librarian the entire responsibility for educating the children in the use and appreciation of books in the library rests with the teacher. It is necessary that she know the books as she does the children. Reading aloud, story telling, book talks, reading for the state testimonial are all methods to be employed in bringing books and children together.

Reading for the State Testimonial

Any child completing fifty books on the approved list before being graduated from the eighth grade is entitled to a state testimonial of reading. It is recommended that at least one book from each group be included in the fifty, with the exception of amusements, special days and home economics, the last being acceptable for girls but not for boys. Yearly records should be kept. It is desirable to keep this reading course in mind when ordering books, and to begin in the early grades to interest children in the idea.

Instruction in the Use of the Library

The use of the library should be taught from the first grade. The care of books, clean hands, wrapping books on rainy days, the parts of a book with the use of the index and table of contents, and the use of the dictionary and encyclopedia can be given in even the smaller schools.

Mending and Binding

Books which are to receive hard usage should be ordered in resewed bindings. Expensive books should be sent for rebinding before they are too badly worn. Mending must be done early, if it is to be effective, but no book should be held together by mending tape, and circulated long after its condition calls for discarding. Each year all books which are worn out or have outlived their usefulness should be withdrawn.

Records

The accession book is a numbered list of all books as they are added to the library. The number assigned is placed in the book and when the book is lost or discarded the number can easily be checked off. This means that at all times an accurate list of books actually in the library is available.

The simplest way to issue books is by means of deposit station cards which may be purchased from library supply houses very reasonably. Space is provided for author and title of a book and for the borrowers' names. These cards are filed alphabetically by author, and may be fastened together with cord or rings to prevent loss. New cards may be inserted at any time and those for discarded books withdrawn.

Traveling Libraries

Traveling libraries may be obtained from the Library Extension Division in Albany. These should be used to supplement inadequate collections, planning at the same time to make regular purchases which will obviate the need.

Use of this List in Supplementing the List in the Syllabus

The elementary syllabus in English language and literature states, "Each teacher should feel free to choose other selections not suggested in the following list, especially if that choice is made from lists issued by the New York State Library or by the School Libraries Section."

CLASSIFICATION

Class numbers are assigned to the various groups of books in the table of contents, but it is not necessary to classify books until there are more than 100 in the collection. If there is a larger number, it is an advantage to arrange by class number in order that all the books on any subject may be found together.

A LIST OF BOOKS TO BE CONSIDERED FOR FIRST PURCHASE FOR TRAINING CLASSES, ELEMEN- TARY SCHOOLS AND RURAL SCHOOLS

An effort has been made to include some of those titles which should be familiar to every grown-up. If he has not read these at the proper time he has missed a joy to which he was entitled. These are books which belong primarily to the elementary grades and every teacher must have read them if she is to recommend them convincingly to others.

In some instances two editions are given. If strict economy is necessary, the cheaper may be chosen, but any collection should contain a few choice editions and it is desirable to have examples of the work of various illustrators. Reinforced bindings are slightly more expensive but wear much longer.

The grades are given, but children should not be confined to this grading because of their varying ability.

LIST OF BOOKS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL LIBRARIES

The arrangement is by subject. The grades given are approximate and the prices are subject to change. There has been no attempt to make literary annotations but descriptive phrases from various sources have been included when the titles were not self-explanatory.

GENERAL REFERENCE BOOKS

Reference books in a grade library are desirable, but they should be added only after there is an adequate collection of books for general reading.

Encyclopedias

Champlin, J. D. The new Champlin cyclopedia for young folks; persons.
